After trying to conceive for a year without success, we decided to see a doctor. We were diagnosed with unexplained infertility, which meant that there was no known reason why we couldn't get pregnant.

We were devastated by the diagnosis, but we were determined to not give up. We started fertility treatments, and we went through a roller coaster of emotions as we hoped and prayed for a positive pregnancy test.

The Loss

After several rounds of fertility treatments, we finally got pregnant. However, our joy was short-lived. We miscarried at 10 weeks. We were heartbroken.

We couldn't believe that we had lost our baby. We felt like we had failed. We wondered if we would ever be able to have a child.

We took some time to grieve our loss, but we eventually decided to try again. We went through more fertility treatments, and we got pregnant again. This time, we made it to 20 weeks before we miscarried.

We were devastated all over again. We couldn't believe that we had lost another baby. We didn't know how we could go on.

The Pain

Infertility is a painful journey. It is a physical, emotional, and financial burden. It can strain relationships and tear families apart.

We experienced all of these things. We went through periods of depression and anxiety. We fought with each other. We felt like we were losing hope.

But we also had each other. We supported each other through the tough times. We talked about our feelings. We cried together. We laughed together. We never gave up on each other.

The Overcoming

After our second miscarriage, we decided to take a break from fertility treatments. We needed to heal both physically and emotionally.

We spent time focusing on our relationship. We went on vacation. We started exercising. We ate healthy. We started to feel like ourselves again.

After a few months, we decided to try again. We went back to the fertility clinic, and we started another round of treatments.

This time, we were lucky. We got pregnant and we carried our baby to term. In 2020, we welcomed our beautiful daughter into the world.

We are so grateful for our daughter. She is the light of our lives. She has made all of the pain and heartache worth it.

Infertility is a difficult journey, but it is not impossible to overcome. With love and support, you can get through it.

If you are struggling with infertility, please know that you are not alone. There are people who care about you and want to help. There are resources available to support you on your journey.

Never give up on hope. You may not be able to have a child the way you imagined, but you can still have a family. There are many ways to create a family, and love is the most important ingredient.
