The crisis began on October 14, when a U-2 spy plane flying over Cuba took photographs of Soviet nuclear missiles being installed on the island. President John F. Kennedy was immediately informed of the situation, and he ordered a naval blockade of Cuba to prevent any more Soviet ships from reaching the island.

The Soviet Union responded by threatening to attack any U.S. ships that tried to enforce the blockade. The two superpowers were now on a collision course, and it seemed like war was inevitable.

However, Kennedy and Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev were both able to step back from the brink of war. After six days of tense negotiations, the two leaders reached an agreement that called for the removal of all Soviet nuclear missiles from Cuba. In return, the United States agreed to lift the naval blockade and to pledge not to invade Cuba.

The Cuban Missile Crisis was a major turning point in the Cold War. It showed that the two superpowers could work together to avoid nuclear war, even when they were on the brink of conflict.
