In the twilight of the age of sail, when the great clipper ships were fading into history, one last epic race took place. It was the Grain Race, a grueling competition that saw sailing ships from around the world battle to be the first to deliver a cargo of grain from Australia to England. The Last Grain Race, written by Eric Newby, is a thrilling and heartwarming true story of adventure, peril, and the end of an era.

Newby, a young journalist, signed on as a crew member on the Pamir, a four-masted barque that was one of the last of its kind. The Pamir was led by the enigmatic Captain Kurt Carlsen, a Norwegian mariner who had a reputation for being both brilliant and ruthless. The crew was a motley group of sailors from all over the world, each with their own unique motivations for joining the race.
